Texas Sweet Jalapeño Mustard
 We consider this nifty little condiment to be the quintessential mustard of Texas. We start with a really good ballpark-style mustard and add some sweet-hot jalapeños to kick up the flavor profile a few notches. Make your sandwiches, hot-dogs and burgers jump up and howl! Also great in deviled eggs and makes a mean potato salad.

Watershed Ranch Roasted Chipotle Salsa
 We can truly say this is an award-winning salsa because it won first place in the salsa category at the 2008 Austin Hot Sauce Festival! We're right proud of this spicy, smokey salsa made from real chipotle chiles and tomatoes with other secret ingredients. It'll be a winner at your next party alongside some good tortilla chips, or try it on grilled chicken.

Old San Antonio Tomatillo Salsa
 Many folks think that tomatillos are just green, unripe tomatoes, but that's just wrong. They're a vegetable with its own separate identity. When you find them in the produce section at the supermarket they're still in their crispy, tan husks, which must be removed before they're used. Tomatillos make a great salsa. You'll agree when you taste ours. We add some charred tomatoes and Serrano chiles, plus a handful of cilantro to make a taste that's mighty pleasing on a corn chip. Great on baked potatoes and grilled fish too. 12 oz. Made in Fredericksburg

Fredericksburg Peach Salsa
 What could be tastier than a salsa made from our luscious peaches? This one is a hands-down favorite with folks who don't like really spicy salsa, but if you do, don't overlook it because it's so really, really tasty. And it does have just the right amount of excitement to be a credible salsa. All natural: peaches, tomatoes, jalapeños, garlic, cilantro and brown sugar. Great dipping salsa! Very mild heat. 12 oz.

Texas Campfire Cornbread Mix

We learned to make bread from ground corn from the Native Americans, starting with the earliest pioneers. The wheat breads that our European ancestors were accustomed to couldn't be made because wheat was not grown in the New World. In Texas, the early settlers came to like the corn-based breads prepared by the Native Americans, and cornbread became a staple of our Texas way of eating. Our Texas Campfire Cornbread Mix is a tasty blend of ground cornmeal and a hint of jalapeno that makes a moist and flavorful bread that's a required accompaniment to a big bowl of chili. 18 oz.
